A Williamsburg High School graduate was involved in the production of a documentary film on Cincinnati's abandoned subway system.

The hour-long film, "Cincinnati's Abandoned Subway," will premiere 7:30 p.m. June 9 at Cincinnati Museum Center.

The movie was developed by Paige E. Malott and Leland Schuler of Time Bonus Productions.

Malott said she grew up in Williamsburg and her parents still live there. She graduated from Williamsburg High in 2004. She also attended Grant Career Center.

After high school, she attended Northern Kentucky University, where she graduated in 2008. In her senior year at NKU, Malott, along with Schuler, started the production company, which specializes in documentaries.

"I always liked storytelling and art," said Malott, who now lives in Northern Kentucky.

The company has produced several films, but the subway documentary is the first big project, she said.

Tickets for the film premiere can be purchased at the door: General admission $12, Museum Center members $10. Cash only. Doors open at 6:30 p.m.

Malott said the Museum Center premiere is a one-time event, but DVDs of the documentary will be available at the event, and can be purchased online starting June 10 at www.thecincinnati.subway.com.
